The Internship

OTT: Amazon Prime

Language: English

Written By: Sreekanth S Pillai

This is a movie where you grab a beer on a lazy Sunday afternoon and watch something forlorn.. nothing serious nothing logical but feels so good to be true..

Two middle aged but exceptionally good salesmen are left jobless one fine afternoon... One of them Googles how to be an intern in Google and they both give an interview for it..

As the movie is not new and not suspense driven I am going to elaborate the interview.. The video call interviewers from Google asks them to imagine a situation where they are reduced to penny sized people and stuck in a blender and asks the way out..

They answer they would lay back and wait for the blender to run it's time..

The interviewer states it's a never stopping blender..

The guys disagree.. they being salesmen reply that a blender, even the durable German ones can run for 11 hours and ones the blender stops you've got two penny sized men out in this world with endless possibilities... They ask for a shot at Google only profiling the endless possibilities of two penny sized men in the world ..

and they prevail in the end..

They gets the worst the team but they bind them together..

The climax is where they use their skills of sales.. they smooth talk the entire team to a win and self confidence...

The movie is silly but it's unbelievably uplifting when you are low.. I rate it as a gem on personal level...
